Recipes of Bacon Wars

The feast of Bacon Wars was full of wondrous porcine pallet pleasers. The Head Cook, Lady Magdalena la Sanguigni, has been kind enough to send some of the recipes for your enjoyment.

Frozen Cream in Bacon and Walnuts with Roasted Sugar

This was pretty straight forward. The ice-cream balls were rolled in a mixture of  $\frac{1}{4}$  chopped crispy bacon and  $\frac{3}{4}$  chopped walnuts. Then the balls were re-frozen. When they were ready to serve homemade caramel sauce was heated and drizzled over them.

Homemade Caramel

1 cup packed brown sugar

$\frac{1}{2}$  a cup half n half

4 tablespoons butter

A pinch of salt

1 Tablespoon vanilla extract

Heat all the ingredients over medium low heat. Whisk gently while heating for 7-8 minutes. Remove from heat. Serve. This will thicken up if you put it in the refrigerator.

Sausage Stuffed Mushrooms

$\frac{1}{2}$  lb ground pork sausage

1 (8oz) package cream cheese

1 bunch parsley, chopped

1 (8oz) package fresh mushrooms

Fry sausage. Drain and transfer to a bowl. Mix in the cheese and parsley. Remove mushroom stems and fill cups with the sausage cheese mixture. Arrange mushroom caps on a baking sheet. Broil in a pre-heated oven for 2 to 3 minutes until lightly brown.

Bacon and Cheddar Stuffed Mushrooms

3 slices bacon

Baby Bella mushrooms

1 tablespoon chopped onion

$\frac{3}{4}$  cup shredded cheddar cheese

$\frac{1}{4}$  cup bread crumbs

1 tablespoon butter

Pre-heat oven to 400 degrees. Fry bacon, let cool, then chop small. Remove the stems from the mushrooms. Chop them small. In a saucepan over medium heat melt the butter and cook the onions and mushroom bits slowly. Remove from the heat and let cool. Mix in the cheese, bread crumbs, and the bacon. Stuff the mushroom caps. Place in the oven and cook for 15 min.

Stuffed Dates wrapped in Bacon

Cream cheese

Pitted Dates

Sliced Bacon

Preheat oven to 400 degrees. Split dates halfway open. Stuff them with a small slice of cheese. Cook the bacon just until its half way done, but still floppy. Let cool. Cut bacon strips in half or in thirds depending on the size of the dates. Wrap each date with a strip of bacon and secure with a toothpick.

Bake for 10 minutes

Twisted Tales- "Born in the SCA"

By THL Thomas Whitehart

It is a funny old world. Geezer that I am, I can actually say I pre-date the SCA. In that I was born before the SCA was created (but not by much...thank you.) I've worn the loaner Freon can helmet, and the green shag carpeting of yore and have watched the Society grow and develop. But my wonderful son (Taliesin), has always been in the SCA. He's been attending events since Pre-natal. Kids who are born in the SCA have a slightly different view of the world. In my son's case, dressing up in garb is second nature. He does not realize that other folks do other things than go to wars on major holidays. The words "HOLD" and "M'lord and M'lady" are universal to him. Once while he was seven or eight, I was talking to some people at a school event and I asked him to introduce himself. He sketched a proper bow, and introduced himself as "Greeting's M'Lady, I am Taliesin, Bard in training". It was second nature to him, and it brought some smiles and raised eyebrows from the folks. "Err, RJ, the other intro." "Oh. Hi, I'm RJ, pleased to meet you!". Parenting in the SCA has it's own unique challenges. SCA kids tend to be a lot like their parents. Creative, inquisitive and energetic. And a challenge! For one thing, what we as adults think of as cool, (ooh look, a really period Viking encampment) may require some maturity to appreciate. Seeing someone in armor is no big deal to a kid who grew up around it. For a young person, watching Sponge-Bob beats watching a procession, pretty much every time. So to our indigent SCAdians, it's all relative. As in "my relatives are making me go."

For those people thinking about creating some new SCAdians, I thought I would offer some handy tips to help you get through the next 18 years or so. First, make friends with other parents. The only way we can stay ahead of the lil' buggers is to team up on them. And "Hand-me-downs" rock. Secondly, give your kid a Celtic persona. That way, all the tartan pajamas at Target make for a cheap pair of trews. And while there, invest heavily in wet-wipes. Third, buy nothing that's really nice that you won't mind being lost, torn or stained. And finally, here are some phrases you might want to practice. (Learned over time).

No, you can't play hide and seek in all the tents. Yes, there is an invisible wall between those tents and these tents.

No, you can't play on the siege engines.

Yes, she's in armor. Yes, she want's you to hit her. No, she did not get all dressed up for nothing. "WHUP!" "Well of course she's going to hit you back!"

Yes, you can go play boffers with the other kids.... HOLD! That is NOT a boffer!

Yes, those folks over there are noisy. Very noisy. Yes, they are making funny noises.

I don't know. Maybe he's tickling her? Yes, he's tickling her a lot !!

Yes, the middle ages are boring. No, you can't play with your (dvd/gameboy/cell-phone.)

HOLD. Yes, flaming peeps are cool. NO. You can't see if they can fly.

Yes, they have a microwave in there. No, you can't have a sleep-over. I don't care if they said it's okay.

Well yes, they are playing Pirates. But Grown UP Pirates. So that's not a Kid-Pirate song!

This is court. Sometimes it takes a long time. Well yes, you can buy a crown-thingie. Yes, that would be a lot faster.

Where did you-

a. leave your trews/hat/cloak/staff/belt/boffer/book/cup/flashlight/(ad-infinitum)

b. learn that song?

c. leave your babysitter?

d. get that food?

e. get that toy? (sword/baby/ballista bolt/wagon/dog/etc.)

f. get that crown-thingie????!!!

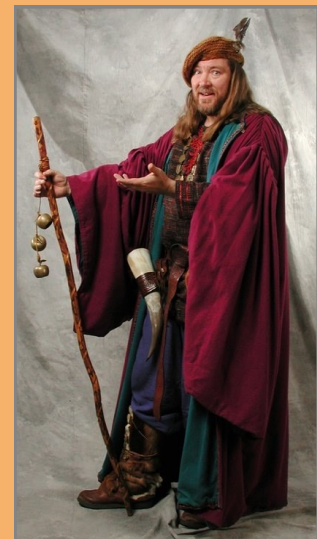

12. No, they did not have light sabers in the middle ages. Those are uhm.. magic swords.

Having a kid in the SCA can lead to some special moments. My son can make the energizer bunny look like a wheezing geriatric. One day at war, after the 20th boffer battle, he came to me and said "DAAAAAD, let's fight." I looked around exhausted and saw 3 strapping big lads in their teens walking by. "Certainly, my young grasshopper...but first...DUM-DAH DUUUMMM!. You must defeat them!" I was joking of course, but quick as flash, he was over there and challenging them. "Uh, Taliesin WAIT!" But it was too late. They were very good natured and accepted his 8 year old challenge. A short period of time later, he had managed to "Kill" two of them in sequence, and legged the third before they figured out that the kid meant business. I have to admit I was pretty proud of him. I doubt I could have taken them. Later, I found out that they part of my friend Sheridan's crew. (Which explained why they were so well mannered, but then they should have known that smaller "hobbit-like" fighters can be ferocious!) So as he grows, I'll try to share my SCA interests with him and see if any of them interest him as well. It makes me proud to see him bow for the ladies and to see him get up and perform (I'm teaching him the family trade, after all.). If all goes well, hopefully, he'll turn out like some of the incredibly cool 2nd generation SCA adults I've seen grow up in the SCA. And maybe, just maybe, some day, I'll hear this..."Dad...Are you playing with the Crown again? Come on, put it back."
(Sigh. He never let's me have any fun!)

Blessings and good luck with your medieval family!

Good manners for SCA Photographers by Ursus of Anglesey

This document is intended to provide some guidelines about how best to take photos in the SCA while offending as few participants as possible.

- 1) Respect the moment – Many of the events we most want to capture are also those that are very meaningful to the participants, like a knighting. Do your best to record it without being intrusive and spoiling it by sticking a camera in their faces. If that means you don't get the best possible shot, so be it.
- 2) Try to be invisible – You want to get good shots while remaining as much in the background as possible. The more people notice you, the less effective and more annoying you are.
- 3) Find a good spot and stick to it – The more you move around, the more noticeable you are. Look at your target area, check the sun, background, lines of sight, etc., then find a good spot to stand and stay there as much as you can.
- 4) Shoot from far away – The closer you get to the action, the more visible and possibly more annoying you become. Invest in a zoom lens or a camera with a zoom and stand as far back as possible while maintaining a clear line of sight as best you can.
- 5) Try not to obscure other people's view – This goes back to #2. Don't annoy people by getting in their way. If you must get that particular shot, step out, take it quickly, and then step back with a brief apology to those you stepped in front of. This also means finding a spot where you can still see (with your zoom – see #4), but does not obstruct the line of sight for other people.
- 6) Mute the shutter – Most cameras nowadays have an option to "mute" your shutter noise. You may not notice it, but in an SCA setting, it can be quite jarring, especially if there are several photographers at work. So please use that option and also shoot from further away if you can (see #4).
- 7) Avoid using your flash – Most flashes are ineffective beyond ten feet, and they really cannot capture movement. Besides, they instantly draw attention to you, which is what you don't want. NEVER use a flash during fighting, because it can distract or blind a fighter at the worst possible moment. If you have to shoot at night, invest in a low-light lens and use a good camera that can handle it.

8) Ask permission – When in doubt, ask before you take someone’s picture. In a public area of the event, this is usually not necessary, and it can be as simple as nodding your thanks to someone after you point your camera at them. If they frown, or approach you to talk about it, be receptive, and most importantly, be willing to delete the photo if they have a problem with it.

9) Respect people’s privacy – Public areas (the list field, the feast hall) are pretty much fair game, but be careful in campsites or shooting into other areas. When in doubt, refer to #8: Ask permission first.

10) Dress conservatively – Be as discreet as you can. Wearing a bright red tunic or dress (for example) will only call attention to you. Dress in muted colors or have an old tabard/tunic you can throw on over your clothes while taking photos to remain as inconspicuous as possible.

11) Put your camera away if not using it – Don’t hang it around your neck like a tourist or constantly carry it. We attend SCA events to get away from the mundane world, and if you are not actively shooting or do not intend to any time soon, please hide your camera in a bag or pouch.

12) Try to avoid bunching up – There are times when several photographers all choose the same spot (which is understandable, since sometimes it is THE best spot). However, please be aware that this only draws attention to the whole group, and can result in a proliferation of shutter clicks from the same area that magnifies the sound. So if you can, consider finding another spot instead of joining the group.

13) Be considerate of other photographers – Don’t step in front of them, don’t push them out of the way and don’t presume you are more important than they are. And most importantly, if they are not following these rules, give them a copy.

One of the truisms you will find in photography is this: “Learn all the rules, and then learn when to break them.” While we should always keep these rules in mind and do our best to abide by them when we can, there will be times when they do not apply and you may want or need to do exactly the opposite. Only you can make that decision, but exceptions should be rare.

Following these simple rules will make you a more effective and less annoying photographer in SCA settings. It is far better to be considerate and discreet and perhaps not get as many good shots as you might have wanted than to be remembered as the jerk who kept stepping in people’s way or annoyed everyone by moving around constantly and spoiling their memories of the event.

Shire of Isenfir - Demo & Harvest Festival at Hill Top Berry Farm & Winery

Saturday, November 16 in Nellyford, VA

The winery is open from 11:00 am to 5:00 pm. We open the gate at 9:30 for set-up.

If you have a display, we ask that set-up is complete by 11:00. Otherwise, arrive at your leisure. At this time there are no martial activities planned (we lack a marshal).

When the winery closes at 5:00, we shoo out the mundanes, break down and then feast in their banquet hall. Feast is pot luck and the host usually surprises us with a wonderful main dish.

Site closes at 10:00.

All are welcome to come and enjoy the day. We've been holding this demo for more than ten years and have many "repeat customers" especially for the period table games we set up.

There are also many attractions nearby, including Skyline Drive, the Blue Ridge Parkway, and a whole string of other wineries and craft breweries. There are restaurants and hotels within reasonable driving distance.

Hill Top Berry Farm & Winery is a producer of "True to the Fruit" wines and historically inspired meads, and is a long-time member and supporter of the SCA.

Chapter and Verse

Since October is the month for scary things like mummies, I'm sharing one of my favorite series with you.

The Amelia Peabody series is a series of 19 novels about husband and wife archeologists Radcliffe Emerson and Amelia Peabody Emerson that covers a thirty year span from the late 1800's to the 1920's. The majority of the books take place in Egypt with a few at home in England. These are wonderful mysteries and I always find myself laughing at the subtle humor that is woven throughout the books. Amelia is a strong, intelligent lead character who can wield her parasol as sharply as any blade. Indeed had it constructed to do just that! Indiana Jones has nothing on Amelia. Each book can stand alone and read out of order. However, there subtle details and running jokes and subplots that you pick up about the characters if they are read in order. This series was written by Elizabeth Peters and I hope you will consider giving them a try.

WAR OF THE WINGS VII

October 9-13, 2013 at Elchenburg Castle
Boonville, North Carolina

It would seem the baronies of Sacred Stone and Dun Carraig are going to war over which reign HRH Ragnarr Blackhammer is the most splendid. The one when he dwelt in Sacred Stone or this most recent one that will begin soon. Silly baronies, it is clear that he was inspired to greatness during his FIRST reign in Caer Mear. However, it seems their Excellencies will have to decide with whom to ally themselves...

War of the Wings has grown into a large event with something for everyone. A marketplace with dining, a masked ball Friday night, Equestrian Combat Demo, silent auction to benefit St. Jude's Children's Hospital, brewers conference, trick or treating, Viking Ship Memorial Burning, along with arts and sciences competitions and marshal activities as well.

October 22nd – Wire Weaving Bezels with Baroness Magda

October 29th – Pumpkin Carving and Painting-Bring your pumpkins and supplies. The Baronial Pumpkin will be chosen! Let the kids wear their costumes! How about bringing some snacks! Children MAY NOT carve, only paint and parents MUST be present.

Remember if you have something you would like to share OR something you would like to learn about! Check with Magda she will always be glad to try to make it happen!!

Mark your Calendars-Dec 17th-Viking Era Norse Garb with Dame Hrothny

You Know you're in Atlantia when...

our at an event and witness "squire jostling".

What is squire jostling ?

From what I have gathered it started as a tradition in the East Kingdom and was brought to Atlantia and has been around for at least 40 years! After the official squiring ceremony, the new squire is grabbed in what amounts to a bear hug, lifted off the ground and shaken by every squire present. Interestingly, in the East jostling is practiced by the Chivalry and not the squires.
